Although the residents of Washington are wrapped in overcoats and be moaning the fate that sent the cold. drizzling rain early today, a score or more of Arabs from the sun-scorched deserts of Arabia are walking about as unconcerned as if their own pitiless sun was shining down upon them. The Arabs are clothed in Oriental fashion, which allows their bare legs to go exposed to the weather.

The Arabs are part of the production of the "Garden of Allah," which appears at the New National Theater this week. They form the local color for both desert and city scenes. The shiek in charge of the Arabs dresses in semi-European garb, but his men adhere to the costume of the desert. The Arabs keep to themselves while in the various cities where the production is given, and with their faces toward the East, or toward Mccca, the sacred city, they say their prayers three times daily. The Mussalman, while he may have violated every law in Mahomet's list, must every law in Mahomet's list, must always pray the a ay, and nothing less than sudden death prevents his doing so.

While in temporary quarters in Washington, the Arabs will feast three times a day on lamb and rice. They demand kid instead of lamb, but as no butcher would confess to selling kid they have to be satisfied with lamb.
